A back-to-school primer for parents

Whether the kids are going back to the same school, or applying to a new one, after Labor Day parents need to hit the ground running Savvy city parents keep spread sheets, mark calendars and palm pilots to keep track of it all: "Absolute dates often can't be changed," attests Grace Ball.

Riverdale Country School's former director of lower school admissions for 27 years and now director of placement at Garden House, an elite Upper East Side nursery school.

Applying to schools is practically a full-time job. Multiple visits are necessary. Without a doubt, appointments for interviews and tours are not to be missed, barring some emergency. At all the best private schools admissions directors like to meet both parents and child. At St. Bernard's, Buckley and Chapin, two separate interview atments are required.

"Some schools will be nice and say, 'Sure we'll give you another date," says Ball, who also advises private clients. "But other schools will say, 'Sorry, you have to go on a wait list, and when another child drops out we'll try and fit you in. That's exactly what they do, and it's an awful thing if that school is your first choice."

Ball also stresses following up, and staying on top of each school, "They're all very different," she says. "Some schools only do tours in May and October others offer huge tours every day." As if that weren't enough, parents need to stay on top of camp calendars, summer programs, athletic schedules, proms, graduations, prep classes, tutors, registration dates, college interviews, early and regular application deadlines, and afterschool activities.

So, parents, get ready, get set and save
